

Children's Book Challenges: The New Wave

Ron Brown

Abstract

A la lumière des études de Jenkinson (1984) et de Shrader (1992), R. Brown montre que les écoles et les bibliothèques publiques ne sont pas les seules institutions qui ne disposent pas de moyens de défense contre les groupes de pression: les directives des instances gouvernementales restent arbitraires et inefficaces contre ces mêmes groupes. Il analyse toutefois l'impact positif sur la lutte contre la censure de certaines associations comme le Conseil du livre et des périodiques du Canada.
