Abstract

Yayoi Kusama is famous in the world of contemporary art. The global popularity of her work has grown exponentially since the turn of the new millennium: her exhibitions at major galleries and museums around the world consistently draw hundreds of thousands of viewers. In 2017 Kusama created a private museum in a Tokyo suburb in order to showcase her own art, and fans have clamoured for admission. At nearly 90, she continues to work and shows no sign of letting up.
White polka dots are stenciled onto glass panels lining the front of the building. Museum staff declined to say how much it had cost to build. Ms. Kusama selected all of the art that appears in the inaugural exhibition, "Creation Is a Solitary Pursuit, Love Is What Brings You Closer to Art," which includes mostly recent work and runs until Feb. Summing up her philosophy of art, Ms. Kusama said, "I hope that you will continue to understand my spirit and that this is for the benefit of world peace and love." In an interview in her studio after the media preview, Ms. Kusama, dressed in a yellow and black polka-dot print caftan, a fiery red wig and a streak of red paint splashed on her right shoe, continued the theme of world peace. The Polka King, based on the scarcely believable true story of Polish-American polka magnate Jan Lewan (Black), follows Lewan's rise from lowly pizza delivery guy to polka superstar and apparent entrepreneur in his own right, even meeting a wife (Jenny Slate) along the way. Sure, he operated a Ponzi scheme in order to amass his fortune, fleecing the elderly.
