Following the Leaders: Issue Attention and Agenda Dynamics in Women’s Health Care Policy

Kara Anne Fisher

Semester
Summer

Date of Graduation
2019

Document Type
Dissertation

Degree Type
PhD

College
Eberly College of Arts and Sciences

Department
Political Science

Committee Chair
Jeffrey Worsham

Committee Co-Chair
John Kilwein

Committee Member
John Kilwein

Committee Member
Matthew Jacobsmeier

Committee Member
Simon Haeder

Committee Member
L. Chris Plein

Abstract
This dissertation focuses on shifts in issue attention in the policy process and examines policy changes. Describing agenda setting is important not only for understanding congressional behavior in general but also for understanding the institutional context of other political behavior. I focus on the processes of positive feedback to explain periods of dramatic policy changes observed over a long period of time.

The purpose of this study is to examine the changes in the politics of health policy which opened the door to women’s health care as an important feature of health politics. Thus, my research is motivated by three questions: (1) How do women’s health concerns get on the agenda? (2) Does positive feedback through legislative entrepreneurship and composition of Congress shift attention? (3) How has women’s health care policy evolved over time? The results of this study not only contribute to the agenda setting literature but also have important implications for practitioners, professional organizations and associations, researchers, patients, and others who contribute to the policy community.

Recommended Citation
https://researchrepository.wvu.edu/etd/4072

DOI
https://doi.org/10.33915/etd.4072