Author Biography

Emily A. Filler, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, VA

Emily A. Filler is a PhD candidate in Jewish Studies, as well as an adjunct instructor in Judaism at the University of Mary Washington. Her dissertation explores modern Jewish philosophical responses to problematic biblical passages, and the potential for rabbinic study practices to respond to the hermeneutical and ethical challenges posed by such texts. Emily is also interested in questions of pedagogy and the ethico-political responsibilities of the academic community. She is the president of the Graduate Religious Studies Association, and a graduate rep to the GSAS Council.
