"Article or Chapter Title." Title of Book, edited by Editor's Name(s), Publisher, Year of Publication, pp. Page Range. Example: Cross Referencing Articles Found in One Book. Sometimes, you may cite several articles by different authors from one edited book. MLA now indicates that you may use cross reference within your Works Cited list, so you don't have to write out the full publication information for every article you cite. To cross reference, you would include in the Works Cited, an entry for the entire collection under the editor's name, plus an entry for each article you are citing, under each author's name, with abbreviated publication information. So, if you are citing two articles from one edited book, you would select Edited Book as the Reference Type. Enter editors (list one under the other) year, title, publisher and place. Select Book as the Reference Type and complete the fields, with the author as the "New South Wales Department of School Education." Remember to put a comma after the author's name in EndNote.
