Abstract/Description:	The poems in this manuscript synthesize three locations in my experience. These locations embody some combination of geography, space, and time specific to the South (Georgia), Southern California, and my heart. The heart is ultimately the final location for poetry made and poetry read. The poems in this document are free verse with attention to enjambment, occasional internal rhyme, and anaphora. I especially enjoy alliteration as a musical technique to please my ear. My tendency is toward gluttony with such sounds, so in my final drafts I pare the alliterative apple and leave random glimpses of the beautiful red skin of repeated consonants and vowels. These poems contribute to my argument in support of myself.
